Gen. Beauregard's Official Report

OF THE BATTLE OF BULL RUN;
FOUGHT JULY 18, 1861.

HEADQUARTERS, FIRST CORPS,
ARMY OF THE VIRGINIA,
MANASSAS, August, 1861.

GENERAL:—With the general results of the engagement between several brigades of my command and a considerable force of the enemy, in the vicinity of Mitchell's and Blackburn's farms, of Bull Run, on the 18th ultimo, you were made duly acquainted at the time by telegraph. But it is my place now to submit in detail the operations of the day.

Opportunities informed of the determination of the enemy to advance on Manassas, my advanced brigades, on the night of the 10th of July, were made aware, from these headquarters, of the impending movement; and in exact accordance with my instructions, a copy of which is appended, marked "A," their withdrawal within the lines of Bull Run was effected with complete success during the day and night of the 17th ultimo, in face of, and in immediate proximity to a large force of the enemy, despite well planned, well executed effort to cut off the retreat of Beauregard's brigade, first of German troops, and subsequently at Centerville, whence he withdrew, by my direction, after midnight, without collision, although enveloped on three sides by their lines. This movement had the effect of deceiving the enemy as to my ulterior purposes, and led him to anticipate an unresisted passage of Bull Run.

As prescribed in the first and second sections of the paper herewith marked "A," on the morning of the 18th of July, my troops resting on Bull Run, from Union Mills Ford to Stone's Bridge, a distance of eight miles, were posted as follows: Beauregard's brigade occupied a position in the vicinity of Union Mills Ford. It consisted of Rhode's 5th and Seibel's 6th regiments of Alabama, and Seymour's 6th regiment of Louisiana volunteers, with four 12-pound howitzers of Walton's battery, and Harlan's, Green's, and Cable's companies of Virginia cavalry.

D. R. Jones' brigade was in position in the rear of McLean's Ford, and consisted of Jenkins' 5th South Carolina, and Burt's 17th and Featherston's 18th regiments of Mississippi volunteers, with two brass 6-pound guns of Walton's battery, and one company of cavalry.

Longstreet's brigade covered Blackburn's Ford, and consisted of Moore's 1st, Gaffan's 11th and Corse's 17th regiments of Virginia volunteers, with two 6-pound brass guns of Walton's battery.

Beauregard's brigade held the position at Mitchell's Ford. It was composed of Kershaw's 24th, Williams' 3d, Bacon's 7th and Cash's 8th regiments of South Carolina volunteers, of Shields' and Del Kemper's batteries, and of Col. Bedford's, Payne's, Ball's, Wickham's and Powell's companies of Virginia cavalry.

Cooke's brigade held the ford below and in the vicinity of the Stone Bridge, and consisted of Withers' 18th, L. Strange's 19th and R. T. Preston's 28th regiments, with Latham's battery and one company of cavalry.

Evans held my left flank and protected the Stone Bridge, crossing with Sloan's 4th regiment South Carolina volunteers, Wheat's special battalion Louisiana volunteers, four 6-pound guns, and two companies of Virginia cavalry.

Early's brigade, consisting of Kemper's 7th, (his company) Early's 24th regiment Virginia volunteers, and three rifle pieces of Walton's battery, Lieutenant Squires, at first were held in position in rear of and as support to Ewell's brigade, until after the development of the enemy, in heavy offensive force, in front of Mitchell's and Blackburn's farms, when it was placed in the rear of and nearly equidistant between McLean's and Blackburn's and Mitchell's farms.

Before the development of the enemy's purpose, about 10 o'clock, A. M., I established my headquarters at a central point, McLean's farm-house, near to McLean's and Blackburn's farms, where two 6-pound guns of Walton's battery were in reserve, but subsequently, during the engagement, I took position to the left of my reserve.

Of the topographical features of the country thus occupied, it must suffice to say that Bull Run is a small stream, running in this locality, nearly from west to east, to its confluence with the Occoquan River. The banks are the one part are rocky and steep, and a considerable scope of country forming a source in Bull Run mountain to a short distance of the Potomac, at Occoquan. At this station, the Potomac, at Occoquan. At this station, the Potomac, at Occoquan.

On the morning of the 18th, finding that the enemy was assuming a threatening attitude, in addition to the regiments whose positions have already been stated, I ordered up from Camp Pickens a reserve, in rear of Beauregard's brigade, the effective men of six companies of Kelly's 8th regiment of Louisiana volunteers, and Kershaw's 11th regiment of North Carolina volunteers, which, having arrived the night before, en route for Winchester, I had halted in view of the existing necessities of the service. Subsequently, the latter was placed in position on the left of Beauregard's brigade.

Appearing in heavy force in front of Beauregard's position, the enemy about midnight opened fire with several 20-pound rifled guns, from a hill over one and a half miles from Bull Run. At the same time Kemper, supported by two companies of light infantry, occupied a ridge on the left of the Centerville road, about six hundred yards in advance of the ford, with two 5-pound (smooth) guns. At first the firing of the enemy was at random; but by half-past 12 P. M., he had obtained the range of our position, and poured into the brigade a shower of shot, which, as we were in a narrow, open field, did much damage to our ranks. From the distance, however, our guns could not reply with effect, and we did not attempt it, patiently awaiting a more opportune moment.

Meanwhile a light battery was pushed forward by the enemy, whereupon Kemper threw only a single shot, with the effect of driving back both the battery and its opposing force. This is understood to have been Ayres' battery, and the damage must have been considerable to have obliged such a retrograde movement on the part of the officer.

The progress of Kemper's position, having now been fully ascertained, his pieces and supports were withdrawn across Mitchell's Ford to a point previously designated, and which commanded the direct approach to the ford.

About half-past 11 o'clock, A. M., the enemy was discovered by the pickets of Longstreet's brigade, advancing in strong columns of infantry with artillery and cavalry on Bull Run. At the same time Kemper, supported by two companies of light infantry, occupied a ridge on the left of the Centerville road, about six hundred yards in advance of the ford, with two 5-pound (smooth) guns. At first the firing of the enemy was at random; but by half-past 12 P. M., he had obtained the range of our position, and poured into the brigade a shower of shot, which, as we were in a narrow, open field, did much damage to our ranks. From the distance, however, our guns could not reply with effect, and we did not attempt it, patiently awaiting a more opportune moment.

while two 6-pounders of Walton's battery, under Lieut. Garnett, were advantageously placed to command the direct approach to the ford, but with orders to retire to the rear as soon as commanded by the enemy.

The northern bank of the stream, in front of Longstreet's position, rises with a steep slope at least fifty feet above the level of the water, leaving a narrow berm in front of the ford some twenty yards. This ridge formed for them an admirable natural rampart, behind which they could and did approach under shelter, in heavy force, within less than one hundred yards of our skirmishers.

The southern shore was almost a plain, raised but a few feet above the water for several hundred yards, then rising with a very gradual, gentle slope, and inclining back to Manassas. On the immediate bank there was a fringe of trees, but with little, if any, undergrowth or shelter, while on the other shore there were timber and much thick brush and covering.

The ground in rear of our skirmishers, and occupied by our artillery, was a level field extending along the stream about one mile, and immediately back for about half a mile, to a border or skirting of dense second-growth pines. The whole of this ground was commanded at all points by the ridge occupied by the enemy's musketry, as was also the country in rear of the line beyond the ridge, in front of 20-pound rifle guns, by the range of hills on which their batteries were planted, and which, it may be further noted, commanded all our approaches from this direction to the three threatened fords.

Before advancing his infantry, the enemy maintained a fire of rifle artillery from the batteries just mentioned for half an hour, then he pushed forward a column of over three thousand infantry to the assault, with such a weight of numbers as to be repelled with difficulty by the comparatively small force of not more than twenty men, and was subsequently withdrawn by General Longstreet, who, with characteristic vigor and intrepidity, our troops engaged at this time were the First and Seventh, and four companies of the Eleventh Regiments Virginia Volunteers. Their resistance was resolute, and maintained with coolness and courage of all ranks. It was successful, and the enemy was repulsed. In a short time, however, he returned to the contest with increased force and determination, but was again foiled and driven back by our skirmishers and Longstreet's reserve companies, which were brought up and employed in the most vigorously assailed points at the critical moment.

It was now that Brig. Gen. Longstreet sent for reinforcements from Early's brigade, which I had anticipated by directing the advance of Gen. Early, to the right of the line of infantry and pieces of artillery. As these came upon the field, my force was reinforced with a third with heavy numbers, to force Longstreet's position. Hays' regiment, 7th Louisiana volunteers, which was in advance, was placed on the bank of the stream, under some cover of the dense second-growth pines, and was relieving Corse's regiment, 17th Virginia volunteers. This was done under a heavy fire of musketry, with promising steadiness. The 7th Virginia, under Lieut. Col. Williams, was then formed to the right, also under heavy fire, and pushed forward to the stream, relieving the 1st and 2nd regiments of Virginia.
